City opens investigation into deadly collapse

Study. A committee has been created to look into standards and practices at the 22nd and Market Streets collapse.

Investigators inspect the debris from last week's building collapse, which killed six people and injured 14. / RIKARD LARMA, METRO

After six deaths and 14 injuries at last week's building collapse, the City Council will look into revamping demolition procedures.

"Demolitions happen every day of the week all across the city," said Council President Darrell Clarke. "And, unfortunately, this incident had to happen … to get very aggressive."

Clarke announced yesterday the formation of a task force — consisting of council members Bobby Henon, Maria Quinones Sanchez, Jim Kenney, Jannie Blackwell and Curtis Jones Jr. — that will investigate mismanagement and oversight.

The committee will review city standards and practices when it comes to licenses, permits, construction, demolition, worker certification, building maintenance and safety.

Henon, who said he has worked in construction for the majority of his adult life, said the collapse was "a result of greed."

"The owner of the property was trying to save a little bit of money by hiring contractors who use unqualified, unlicensed workers," he said.

Kenney said cost should not outweigh safety.

"Cost of construction should not trump safety," he said. "And safety should not be sacrificed to cut costs."

Mayor Michael Nutter's administration has come under fire in recent days after allegations surfaced that the demolition contractor, Griffin Campbell Construction, operated in an unsafe manner and had a history of code violations.

The city last week announced a sweeping set of reforms surrounding the permitting, inspection and penalty enforcement of private contractors at demolition sites.

"One of the things that is most egregious is this third-party permit-pulling, where an individual who happens to be licensed under a certain trade … goes in and a pulls a permit … sees the potential and hands it over to a non-licensed and unqualified company that does demolition work." Kenney

More litigation

Three more lawsuits filed, total now six

Three more survivors of Wednesday's building collapse have filed lawsuits, which brings the total to six.

Robert Mongeluzzi's law firm, which represents survivor Nadine White, 54, also filed suits on behalf of survivors Felicia Hill, 36, Rosemary Kreutzberg, 66, and Rodney Geddis, 21. They join suits the firm already filed on behalf of Jennifer Reynolds, 27, Bernie Ditomo, 61, and White.

Attorney Jonathan Cohen also filed a lawsuit on behalf of Linda Bell, who was shopping in the Salvation Army thrift store when the building collapsed. The building owner, Richard Basciano, and his company, STB Investments Corp., are listed as defendants, as is Griffin Campbell and his construction firm, Griffin Campbell. Equipment operator Sean Benschop and S&R Contracting, Inc., which subcontracted the demolition to Campbell, were also named in the new filings.

DA's office launches Grand Jury probe

District Attorney Seth Williams announced yesterday his office has convened a grand jury to investigate possible criminal charges in connection with last week's fatal building collapse.

Demolition site excavator operator Sean Benschop has already been charged for allegedly working under the influence.

"Philadelphians have no shortage of opinions of the many people that should be held responsible for the perceived actions and inactions that may have played a role in the chain of events that led to the building collapsing," Williams said.

"While some may be held responsible in civil court, the role of the grand jury will be to hear from witnesses, to gather documents, to gather information and to then determine if anyone in addition to Mr. Benschop should be held criminally responsible."

The Linc. Eagles announce $125M stadium renovations

After 10 years, Philadelphia Eagles officials believe the stadium could use a makeover.

The team announced Sunday a two-year, $125 million plan to renovate Lincoln Financial Field, which includes expanded video boards and seating capacity.

This year, wireless Internet will be available for fans, and expansions will be made to the three main entrance gates and concession stands.

By 2014, two new high-definition video boards will be installed in both end zones that will stretch over 9,500 square feet.

An additional 1,600 stadium seats will be added — about 800 in the southwest corner, 600 in the northeast corner and 200 in the northwest corner.

Larry Needle, executive director of the Philadelphia Sports Congress, said these renovations would help attract larger events to the area.

Perhaps a World Cup, Olympic Games or Super Bowl?

"I think the reality is, Philadelphia could probably handle the biggest and the best events in the world," he said.

TOMMY ROWAN

Additional upgrades

- This year, murals and images honoring players and moments in the team's history will be added throughout the stadium.
- By 2014, two bridges will be constructed in the southwest corner, and a new escalator will be built on the west side of the stadium.

Cops: Woman tried to rob 6 stores in 4 hours

Serial. A Delaware woman allegedly used a stolen car and mimicked a gun with her fingers in her shirt.

Melissa Hutchison / DSP

Delaware State Police on Saturday arrested Melissa Hutchison, 32, after she allegedly attempted to rob six convenience stores in four hours.

Police said Hutchison started her rampage around 1 a.m. at a Wawa in Bear, putting her hands in her sweatshirt to mimic a gun and demanding money, then fleeing when the clerk refused.

Hutchison just 20 minutes later tried her luck at a Shell station in New Castle, making away with an undisclosed amount of cash and fleeing in a vehicle, police said.

She allegedly reappeared around 4:45 a.m. at a Wilmington 7-Eleven, then moved on to a second 7-Eleven, a Dunkin' Donuts and another Shell station.

Hutchison used a candy bar and then sunglasses to imitate a gun, and after each attempt, "futilely" tried to open the registers herself, police said.

When police finally caught up with her, she allegedly attempted to flee but crashed her car, which authorities said was stolen. METRO

Tech. Experts tie WikiLeaks soldier to database breach

Computer forensic experts testified yesterday that they traced a break-in to a secret U.S. government website to Pfc. Bradley Manning, charged with the biggest leak of classified files in the nation's history.

The testimony came as the court-martial of the U.S. soldier entered its second week. Manning is accused of providing more than 700,000 secret files to anti-secrecy website WikiLeaks while serving in Iraq in 2009 and 2010.

He faces 21 charges, including aiding the enemy, and could face life in prison without parole if convicted in the case, which has raised questions about the limits of openness and secrecy in the digital age.

Government witnesses told the court-martial that they had traced breaches of the U.S. government's secret Intelink intelligence database to Manning's user name and Internet Protocol address, a major step in proving that Manning orchestrated the release of documents including secret diplomatic cables.

Edward Snowden's decision to flee to Hong Kong as he prepared to expose the U.S. government's secret surveillance programs may not save him from prosecution due to an extradition treaty in force since 1998.

A 29-year-old former CIA employee, Snowden has identified himself as the person who gave the Guardian and the Washington Post classified documents about how the National Security Agency obtained data from U.S. phone and Internet companies.

While preparing his leaks, Snowden left Hawaii for Hong Kong on May 20 so he would be in a place that might be able to resist U.S. prosecution attempts, he told the Guardian.

"Mainland China does have significant restrictions on free speech, but the people of Hong Kong have a long tradition of protesting in the streets, making their views known," Snowden, a U.S. citizen, said in a video interview posted on the Guardian's website.

The United States and Hong Kong signed their extradition treaty in 1996, a year before the former British colony was returned to China. It allows for the exchange of criminal suspects in a formal process that may also involve the Chinese government.

The leaker who revealed top secret U.S. surveillance programs says he hopes to find shelter in Iceland, but he may be disappointed by the reception from a new government seen as less keen than predecessors to attract exiles and Internet renegades.

Apple unveils streaming music service, revamps iOS iTunes Radio.

The program will compete against Pandora, letting users customize by genre and personal taste.

Apple Inc. yesterday unveiled iTunes Radio, a free music streaming service that is a key part of overhauled mobile software. The company called it the most revolutionary redesign of its operating system since the iPhone was introduced in 2007.

As Apple kicked off its annual conference in San Francisco for its developers, executives also showed off a new line of Mac computers, and said that updated Siri voice software used on the iPhone now incorporates Microsoft Corp's Bing search engine.

The service is free with ads across Apple's devices, including Apple TV. It is free of ads for subscribers to iTunes' Match, a digital content feature.

Called iOS 7, the smartphone and tablet platform redesigned by resident creative honcho Jonny Ive comes with a new edge-to-edge look that uses translucency to highlight underlying content, new typefaces and new icons. Apple plans to make iOS 7 available in the fall.

Evolution of the internship

Experience. Will 'The Internship' inspire other adults to seek one out?

Internships might not just be for young people anymore. / BANANASTOCK

The process of hunting for, securing and ultimately completing an internship in a desired career field has evolved into a stressful reminder of the post-graduation hurdles that await potential job-seekers.

The recent release of "The Internship," starring Vince Vaughn and Owen Wilson, glamorizes one of the business world's most sought-after internships while lampooning the plight of two 40-year-olds who land a college tech geek's dream — internships at Google.

In today's business landscape, the movie's premise might not entirely be Hollywood fiction.

Michael Crom, executive vice president of Dale Carnegie Training, evaluates trends in the business world. And he often works with companies to assess both paid and unpaid internships.

As a leader of a global performance improvement, assessments and training company, Crom has seen the importance of internships, for both employers and interns, grow mightily in recent years.

"The Internship" is Hollywood satire, but is it reasonable to believe that companies could start hiring interns who aren't college-aged?

I think you may see some older people doing it if they make a career transition. Not all employers will accept someone who is not a college-aged intern, but there are those that would take a 40-year-old intern and benefit from it. Sometimes if you're laid off, for example, you might have some continued compensation, and it might give you a few months to take an internship that is unpaid.

How have internships evolved in the last decade?

I think with the financial crisis, internships became more and more important. In some ways companies began to rely on interns in lieu of full- and part-time people as a way to fill in some of the gaps that were created by the economic pressures. Many companies are putting a heavy emphasis on using this as a screening tool.

How can companies that hire unpaid interns fulfill legal obligations while ensuring a worthwhile internship?

They need to be very cognizant of the legal criteria. Ultimately the internship is a benefit to the intern. But it shouldn't displace regular positions. An additional obligation is, whether they are paid or not, that you are there to help them grow and not take advantage of them.

CHRIS LONGO
letters@metro.us

Attitude check

How can interns make sure they aren't overwhelmed by the increased expectations of companies?

Interns should work with their employer to establish an understanding of expectations. If you can open those lines of communication, you'll be productive as an intern. The critical factor is keeping your attitude right. You're not coming in complaining and whining about this overload, but you're asking if you can clarify.

National Women's Law Center files discrimination suit

The National Women's Law Center filed suit about health coverage.
INGRAM PUBLISHING

One of the first battles of the Affordable Care Act was sparked recently in Pennsylvania's higher education system.

Utilizing the new law, the Washington-based National Women's Law Center filed a discrimination complaint with the federal Office for Civil Rights against the Pennsylvania State System of Higher Education.

The complaint states that PASSHE's health care plan excludes pregnancy coverage for dependents, thereby violating a section of the Affordable Care Act requiring plans to provide comprehensive care to women, which includes pregnancy.

"We were aware of the problem of young women who were dependent on their parents' plans not getting covered for maternity. It's clear that [the ACA] does apply in that situation, so we investigated and discovered many plans that excluded this coverage," says Sharon Levin, the director of federal reproductive health policy at NWLC.

The complaint names five U.S. companies and organizations nationwide, including PASSHE.

In a statement PASSHE sent to Metro, media relations manager Kenn Marshall said, "All of PASSHE's health care plans provide maternity coverage to covered employees, spouses and domestic partners."

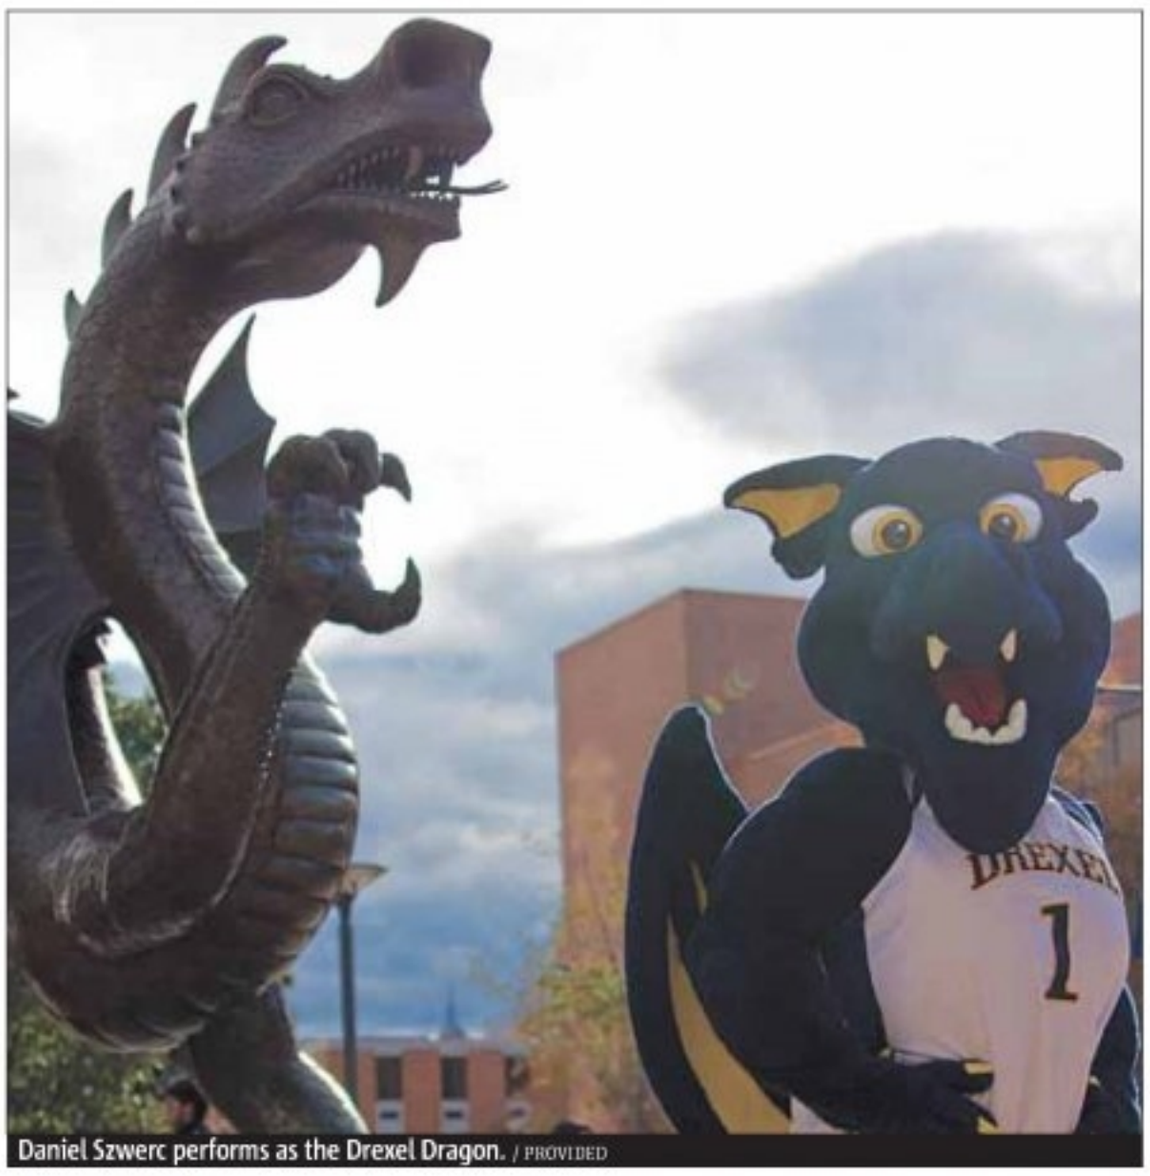
Inside the furry suit

Spirit. Between hoisting cheerleaders in the air and showcasing his dance moves, Daniel Szwerc gets pretty hot while playing Mario the Magnificent.



Daniel Szwerc performs as the Drexel Dragon. / PROVIDED

Daniel Szwerc is the worst-kept secret on the Drexel University campus. He says he tries not to make it too public that he's the guy inside the blue furry dragon known as Mario the Magnificent. Well, the jig is up: Szwerc gave us the inside scoop about what it's like to breathe fire (metaphorically).

How long have you been wearing the costume of Mario the dragon?
I have been a dragon since the beginning of freshman year. When I got here as a freshman, I was looking online to see things to get involved with on campus, [and] I saw it on the athletics website. I got in touch with them and followed up a few times. They happened to have an opening.

What is exciting to you about performing?
I love being able to go anywhere and do anything you want — there is a great deal of freedom. Nobody is judging me based on "Dan acting weird" (but the cheerleaders on the dance team will make fun of me for it later). There is a lot of freedom to walk through the stands. It's a fun opportunity to do whatever you want.

So, what's it like inside that dragon?
It's really, really hot. The Drexel costume is much thicker than [for] other schools that I've seen, so it's pretty heavy, and it has very limited field of view. If you want to know what it's like, just make a circle with your hands about six inches away from your eyes, and that's the field of view you have for a few hours. For the first half hour, it's a lot of fun, and then after that, it's a race to the finish, so I can cool down and get out of it. There was a game once against [the University of Massachusetts at Amherst] where it went into overtime, and I was too dizzy to stand up straight.

Yowza. So how do you prepare for the heat?
Usually the night before an appearance, especially if it's a big one, I start drinking a lot of water. I bring a lot of water with me, too. I try to always have somebody else to come along in the event that it's getting to be too much.

So, do you have some amazing moves?
I'm not a great dancer. Some of my good friends on the dance team have been trying to fix that, but to no avail. In the costume, it doesn't really matter — being silly and having ridiculous dance moves is even better at a certain point.

What's the hardest part?
The physical toll is one thing. People will forget that there's a person inside it, and while they're giving a speech, it's physically demanding for me to just stand there and watch them for an hour. But I'm still having a great time with it.

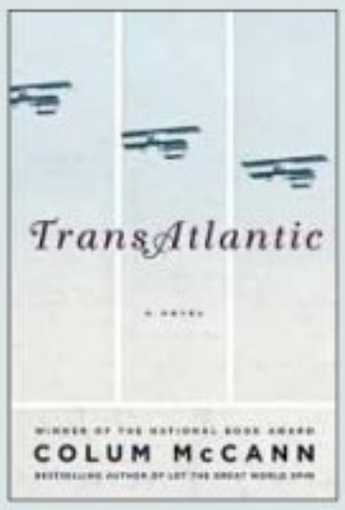
What Dad really wants to read

If you don't have time to golf or fish with your old man, you could at least get him a book about those things.

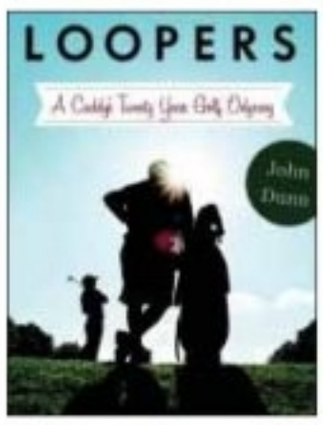
ALISON BOWEN

Still searching for a great Father's Day gift for Dad? Look no further than this list of books — whether he is a fishing fan or wants to bunker down in a transatlantic adventure, here are our parental picks.

For a transnational adventure



"TransAtlantic," a new novel from National Book Award winner Colum McCann, weaves a story detailing three different crossings across the Atlantic in dynamic time periods, from an Irish famine to a modern-day presidential visit from Barack Obama. The novel stars historical figures like Frederick Douglass alongside characters like aviators attempting the first nonstop flight.

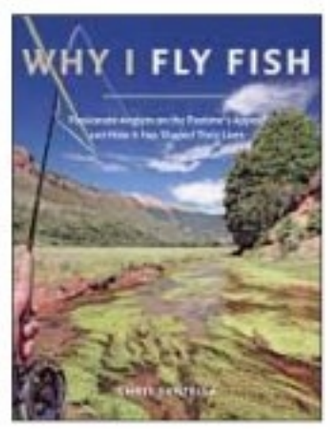


For golf laughs, and maybe tears

The new memoir "Loopers: A Caddy's Twenty Year Golf Odyssey" tracks decades of caddy experiences. John Dunn worked at golf courses across the country, hitchhiking to fancy greens where he made as much as $500 a day in tips. The book isn't all laughs — it includes problems that plague caddies.

For a father-daughter relationship

In "The Entertainer: Movies, Magic and My Father's Twentieth Century," Margaret Talbot brings old Hollywood stories and family legends together from the life of her father, actor Lyle Talbot. As well as following his adventures, the book tracks changes in the entertainment world.



For fans of fishing

Fishing books might be a classic dad gift, but get him a book tailored toward one specific type of fishing this time with "Why I Fly Fish" by Chris Santella. The author interviewed 25 different fishermen, and fly-fishing pros and celebrities like Henry Winkler share personal reasons for the pursuit.

For a new take on old history

This book takes an underwater view of World War II. In "The War Below: The Story of Three Submarines That Battled Japan," James Scott describes a submarine force that destroyed a Japanese fleet. Tales include an underseas appendectomy with kitchen utensils. This is a fresh story for WWII fans.

Let the Weight Be Over!
My weight loss journey began a little more than 2 years ago, during an annual physical. My doctor told me that if I didn't do something about my weight – and fast – that I would likely end up with very serious medical conditions. My five foot frame was carrying 259 lbs.! I had been trying conventional diets for years. I would lose weight, but never the amount I needed to lose, and was never able to maintain the weight loss.
BEFORE
"2 years and 110 lbs. after surgery, and I am still on my journey!" – Lovie
I knew my doctor was right. So, after some research, I found the Center for Surgical Weight Loss at Hahnemann University Hospital. With the guidance of the surgeon, the dietitian, and the rest of the surgical weight loss team, I was motivated to get serious about losing weight. In fact, by following the dietitian's advice, I was able to lose 27 pounds even before surgery! I am grateful to the entire surgical weight loss team – they provided the education and support I needed to reclaim my life!*

Seth Rogen and Evan Goldberg have been friends since childhood and writing partners since high school, where they first penned "Superbad." Their new collaboration, "This Is the End," features an ensemble cast of some of their favorite past co-conspirators. Rogen, Jay Baruchel, James Franco, Jonah Hill, Danny McBride and Craig Robinson (all playing themselves) hunker down together in Franco's house during the end of the world.

This idea was spawned from a short you wrote in 2007 called "Jay & Seth vs. the Apocalypse." How did it turn into a full-length movie?
Seth: It took us a really long time to think of a way to expand it, honestly. We just couldn't think of where it would go, so it really took us four years of just kicking around the idea to really even get what type of full-length movie it could be.
Evan: We had the "people play themselves" idea separately — and until we combined [our thoughts], it didn't seem like the apocalypse thing was a full idea.
Seth: Around three and a half years ago, we kind of realized we could combine them into one movie.

How hard was it to round up all the people you wanted for this film?
Evan: The scheduling of getting them all together — you know, Danny's on "Eastbound," Craig's on "The Office," Franco does what he does, Jay's doing a million things in Canada — it was unbelievably hard to get the scheduling worked out.
Seth: We miraculously found a window [when] all the guys were free, which was basically between April and July of last year, and once we had that window, it wasn't that bad, actually. Never in our wildest dreams did we think we'd get the six people we initially wanted.

There's a lot of self-deprecation in the movie. Was it hard to get the actors to poke fun at themselves?
Evan: The studios were kind of frightened by the concept of actors playing themselves.
Seth: The actors were really into it. I don't think anyone said no based on content. We were going out to these actors to see if they would play themselves, so they were overwhelmingly psyched about it. It was nice to see that some people thought it was a good idea.

In the film, Michael Cera got pretty wild.
Seth: He was so crazy, it kind of raised the bar for everyone. There was a lot of peer pressure involved in making this movie. It was like, "Well, Michael did that, so you don't want to be the guy who says no to doing something."
Evan: It wasn't like when an actor finished their bit, they went back to their trailer. They stayed with all the other actors, because everyone was excited to be with everyone. So you were doing your scene, and all your peers were watching you.

It's the end of the world, and you can only have three items to try to survive. What are they?
Evan: Three of these four: water, food, guns, condoms.
Seth: The thing about guns is they can help you acquire any other items you may need.
Evan: But you don't want venereal disease.
Seth: With a gun, you can get condoms.
Evan: True.

Wouldn't that depend on whom you were stuck with?
Evan: Condoms are just always a good idea.
Seth: You can fill them with water and play with them.

LIZ BROWN
letters@metro.us

Q&A

What would be the last thing you would say to each other?

Seth: You are nothing without me.
Evan: Hahaha.
Seth: It's true: The laugh is probably what would actually happen.
Evan: I hope my last moment is just "hahahaha."

It's not all throwing snowballs at Santa Claus

Theater. "The Philly Fan" takes a look inside the mind of a sports devotee.

Archie Bunker look-alike Tom McCarthy is "The Philly Fan."
JACQUES-JEAN TIZIOU / WWW.JJTIZI

It's a dry spell for Philly sports teams, but the Philly sports fan has never been hotter.

Moviegoers got their share of our sports passion in the hit movie "Silver Linings Playbook," in which Bradley Cooper and Robert De Niro played hardcore Eagles fans.

"I think they definitely got it right," says Joe Canuso, director of "The Philly Fan," which runs its Father's Day edition at Theatre Exile's Studio X.

The movie was "a fictional piece," he says, "but it was mostly about getting to the essence of what an Eagles fan is. The same thing for 'Invincible' [about Eagles receiver Vince Papale] — they did a good job of capturing the Philly sports fans' psyche."

Yet perhaps not as well as "The Philly Fan," which premiered at the Fringe Festival in 2004.

"It really is a story about a working-class guy who is loyal to his teams, his family and his city," says Canuso. "We hit a nerve because it's more than just about sports. It's about what it's like to be a blue-collar guy who, for him, sports is an outlet for the frustrations he has in his life. People can relate to that."

"The Philly Fan" was written by Bruce Graham and is conceived and performed by Tom McCarthy. Look for special appearances by Philly sports celebs during the Studio X run.

"We touch on how Philly sports fans have gotten a bad rap," Canuso says. "The national media focuses on a few negatives, because that's the way the media is: a guy getting tasered or a guy throwing up on a little girl at a game. Our main thing is to focus on the 99.9 percent of fans who are passionate about their sports teams, but not crazy."

"Go toward the shoulder of a season," Pikovsky says. "You don't necessarily want to go at the height of a season, and you might not necessarily go at the off point, but somewhere that's toward the end or a little bit early on in the height of the season, you'll find discounted airfare."

Have passport (but not cash), will travel

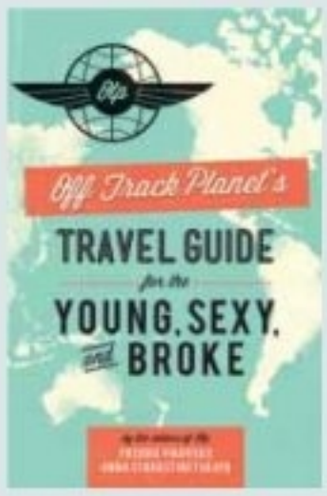
Destinations. Short on dough? Consider checking out one of these under-the-radar spots.

"Traveling shouldn't be reserved for people who are affluent," says Freddie Pikovsky, an editor at the travel blog Off Track Planet and co-author of "Off Track Planet's Travel Guide for the Young, Sexy, and Broke." His book is a frank guide for the ramen eaters among us, and we mean frank — think Greece's best hookup spots; avoiding narcs in Thailand.

Not all of us can afford that five-star hotel, so we asked Pikovsky to give us some alternative places to put our extra vacation days toward.

Dream trip: Australia

Try: Taganga, Colombia



The small fishing village of Taganga, Pikovsky says, is "one of the cheapest places in the world to get SCUBA-certified." It's cheap to stay in the area too, and it retains a lot of pre-commercialization. "The last time I was there, they didn't even have roads yet — it's still dirt roads," Pikovsky says. And we know what you're thinking — worried about being kidnapped? "Things have changed there so much," he says. "The guerillas that were kidnapping people were decentralized by the government, so kidnapping is not as valuable a thing for them anymore." Other people's hesitation to visit means the crowds are few, and the luxury resorts are popping up — all of which means that now is a good time to go.

Dream trip: Amsterdam

Try: Vancouver, Canada

Besides Colombia, another country that's going through a reputation shift is Amsterdam. Gone are the days of hitting a cafe for an illegal smoke: "They've actually changed their law, and it's now only for locals," Pikovsky says. But, he says, Vancouver is the new it-spot for cafe culture. "You can do basically everything that you were once able to do in Amsterdam as a tourist but can't do anymore."

Dream trip: Paris

Try: Buenos Aires, Argentina

"The city is built almost like the Paris of South America," Pikovsky says. For your French fix, hit the neighborhood of Palermo, which resembles Paris and has "a lot of European influence," he says. Other sites to see: the Pink Palace, Argentina's version of the White House, and Avenida 9 de Julio, the widest street in the world.

MEREDITH ENGEL
meredith.engel@metro.us

Dream trip: Tokyo

No, really, go there

"Since the earthquake, they've been trying to promote tourism heavily," Pikovsky says. "I haven't personally been to Japan, [but] there are probably affordable options now for flying over there."

No siblings? No problem

Author Lauren Sandler
JUSTIN LANE

Non-fiction. Those stereotypes of only children? Totally untrue, reports Lauren Sandler.

If parents no longer felt like they had to have second children because it was required of them, what would that change? / JUSTIN LANE

Pity the poor only child. The eldest child is never stereotyped as spoiled; the youngest is never pigeonholed as maladjusted or lonely. Forget giving birth to a small army — it is when you say you are only having one child that eyebrows get raised.

Lauren Sandler is on a mission to change these misconceptions of onlies with her new book, "One and Only: The Freedom of Having an Only Child, and the Joy of Being One." Sandler, who is an only child and has an only child herself, found herself being a de facto proponent of stopping after one.

"One day, I got an email from a friend that said, 'I'm pregnant with my second child, and I know how you feel about this.' And I thought, 'I don't know how I feel,'" recalls Sandler, a journalist who writes on cultural politics and women's issues. "Her comment sat with me in a funny way. Then, when I had my child and I was wrestling with what it would mean to not have another, I decided to report it out, like I do for everything."

What Sandler found was "stunning": "Hundreds of studies over decades found that our stereotype of lonely children is totally untrue," she says.

Filled with in-depth reporting (with some wry motherhood observations thrown in), "One and Only" lays it out there: If you decide to only have one child, you aren't "ruining" that child by deciding not to give [him or her] a brother or sister. You may just create a happier family life because of it.

Sandler is quick to note that she's not saying that having one is the best choice; only that it is a valid choice, and one that parents don't think they can make without seeming selfish or withholding. "If most people have their first kid for them, and their second kid for their first kid — which is what polls have consistently told us they do — what would it mean if they didn't feel like they had to?" she asks. "Don't have another kid just because you think you're gonna avoid screwing up your first kid if you do."

Research from "One and Only" by Lauren Sandler

The good news about only children:

- In 500 studies over the past several decades, examining 16 traits including leadership, maturity, extraversion, social participation, peer popularity, generosity, cooperativeness, flexibility, emotional stability and contentment, only children do just as well as siblings. In only two categories is there a marked difference between singletons and sibs: achievement motivation and self-esteem. And in those traits, onlies fare far better.

The increasing juggle of motherhood:

- Each child adds no less than 120 hours of housework a year.
- Women devote about 13 hours a week to childcare, up from about 10.5 hours nearly a half century ago. Meanwhile, the American workweek has increased by 13 hours.
- A single child decreases a mother's employment by about eight hours a week. A second child leads to a further reduction of about 12 hours (to a total of 20).
- Sixty percent of men say they are struggling with the demands of work and family.

The financial reality:

- A child born in 2011 will cost an average of $235,000 to raise to age 18.
- Two-parent households with two children devote more than a third of their income to their kids.

... and yet:

- About 76 percent of Americans told Gallup pollsters they thought that being an only child was a serious disadvantage in life, responsible for everything from loneliness to major character defects.

Can't read the fine print

I have been avidly reading Metro for many years. There is one or two minor complaints I have with the new format though.

One, I miss the weather forecast that used to be on the front page. Two, sometimes when there is white print on a green, yellow or similar background the print is very difficult to read. I have close to 20/20 vision and sometimes I can't discern a word from the side of, for instance, the Gossip section. It is getting kind of annoying.

Report: Pats sign Tebow

Tim Tebow is teaming up with Bill Belichick. The Patriots are expected to sign Tebow prior to the start of the team's minicamp today, according to ESPN. New England hasn't officially announced the transaction. Tebow played under Patriots offensive coordinator Josh McDaniels in Denver. Belichick denied a previous report saying that the coach disliked Tebow as a player.

TWO EAGLES WHO NEED THEIR WINGS CLIPPED

The Voice of Philly Sports

ANGELO CATALDI

If Chip Kelly really wants to show some initiative, the coach will demand that Mike Vick and Cary Williams report to training camp with their mouths taped shut.

Vick decided on the final day of minicamp last Thursday — the last practice before camp opens in six weeks — to inflame the already combustible quarterback situation by publicly calling for a decision on the starting job before the players reconvene. He suggested he's not getting enough work, nor enough respect.

First of all, Vick is not going to win the starting job. You read that here three months ago, and you will read it again when the decision becomes final in three months. Kelly said his top priority for the position is smart decision-making — a battle that a turnover addict like Vick will never win. By most accounts, Nick Foles already is ahead in the competition, with rookie Matt Barkley a formidable threat.

So why would Vick try to force the issue with a public outcry when he knew Kelly had no intention of making his choice now? There are only two possibilities. Either Vick is frustrated that the starting job is not the lock he thought it would be, or he's hoping to get released soon enough to latch onto another team.

The really important sequence in Vick's dumb power play came when a reporter approached him and asked if he understood the impact of such a public challenge to Kelly. "Print it," he said. Wow.

While Vick was sealing his fate last week, Cary Williams was trying to get the perfect fit for the dunce cap he'll be wearing this season — if indeed there is a season for him after his insane behavior.

The overrated cornerback, who signed a three-year, $17.5 million free-agent contract in March, blew off all of the OTAs with a series of insulting excuses, including selecting light fixtures for his new house and attending his 3-year-old daughter's dance recital. Then, to remove all doubt that he is a moron, he lectured Philadelphia about the personal burdens of being a professional athlete — a message that enraged our blue-collar city.

"I'm not surprised at all by their reaction," Williams said. "And I don't care, truthfully, if you want me to be honest."

OK, since we're all being honest here, Williams was ranked 69th by Pro Football Focus at the cornerback position last season, and quarterbacks had a 98 rating when throwing to receivers he was defending. On the world-champion Baltimore Ravens, he was a weakness, not a strength. He is blessed to be playing here, and doubly blessed to have a job at all.

Both he and Mike Vick need to spend the next six weeks counting their blessings, while the rest of us count the days till they're gone.

Analysis

Is Dom Brown the next big thing?

Now that he has emerged as the one true offensive leader on the 2013 Phillies, it's time to ask the only question that really matters about Domonic Brown: Is he a superstar in the making or a flash in the pan?

At a time when the Phillies desperately need a new young hope, our first instinct is to say he's for real. He's a young star who finally listened to good advice, committed himself to his career and is taking full advantage of his amazing talent.

We all want to believe that. We all have to believe that.

But a far more objective voice is emanating from the Baseball Hall of Fame. Peter Gammons, of the MLB Network, offered some words of caution during an appearance on my WIP radio show last week. He wouldn't rule out the notion that Brown will be a great baseball player, but Gammons sees some alarming signs.

The biggest is that Brown exploded into the baseball consciousness with a May performance that had no historic precedent. In those 31 days, Brown hit 12 homers while never receiving a base on balls. Not one walk.

"It raises the question, if he's going to swing all the time, why throw him strikes?" Gammons said.

Of course, he's right. Brown is still very much a work in progress. The guess here is that Brown will be a star after all because he has demonstrated, for the first time, the desire to learn from his mistakes and address his own shortcomings.

Hey, Dom Brown has already walked four times in June. That's a good sign, isn't it?

Opinion. Sixers can't do anything right

Sam Hinkie finally went public last week with an update on his endless search for a new coach. When asked how it's going, the new Sixer GM said: "So far, so good."

Whew. How are the three or four Sixer fans left in our city supposed to process all of that information? In the past month, while Hinkie has been holed up in his hermetically sealed analytics capsule, the Cavaliers, Suns, Pistons, Hawks, Bobcats and Kings all hired new coaches. Did Hinkie even bother to interview any of those candidates? If not, what has he been doing?

The information blackout imposed by Hinkie and his bosses is so stupid, it defies belief. They do need to sell tickets next season, don't they?

Meanwhile, Julius Erving said the Sixers got snookered last year in the Andrew Bynum trade because the center was "damaged goods." Why can't anyone in the front office say that?

Charles Barkley said he was willing to consider running the Sixers if they had contacted him. A crazy idea? At the very least, Barkley would have delivered something the franchise has lacked for a decade now: relevance.

Tiger on the course

Tiger Woods gets an up-close look at Merion's famed wicker baskets during his practice round yesterday. The U.S. Open is being played at the famed East Course this week. Masters champ thinks he might be the 'third wheel' at the US Open Golf. The world's No. 3 golfer pairs up with Woods and McIlroy for this week's tournament at historic Merion.

Scott won The Masters. GETTY IMAGES

History is everywhere you look at Merion Golf Club.

From the wicker baskets adorning the flagsticks to Ben Hogan's iconic 1-iron, there is a virtual history lesson around every fairway and green. It's there, and it's in your face — and don't think that it's lost on the current crop of golfers.

Adam Scott, fresh off his Masters victory, couldn't help himself when he first visited Merion three weeks ago. Scott strolled right into the pro shop and bought a poster of Hogan, one showing the legendary golfer right before he made par to force an 18-hole playoff at the 1950 U.S. Open at Merion.

"I'll buy [the Hogan poster] here, because then at least it's from the place where he hit the 1 iron. It's fun stuff like that," Scott said. "I think most of us appreciate the history of the game and understand everything that's happened before, and we all like doing that kind of stuff."

Scott has been very selective in the tournaments he's entered since winning at Augusta two months ago. Scott hasn't been a fixture on the late-night talk show circuit, either.

He's been content to fly under the radar. Of course, that's all about to change once Thursday's championship round begins. Scott might be hearing flash bulbs in his sleep as he is paired with, arguably, golf's two biggest stars, Tiger Woods and Rory McIlroy. It might turn out to be an advantage for Scott.

"I think this year, obviously, there's a lot of focus on Tiger and Rory," said Scott, who arrived in Philadelphia last Friday. "I know what to expect out there, I think. … I'm probably also the third wheel this week, as well. That's why I'm No. 3 in the world — otherwise, I wouldn't be the third wheel, I guess."

Rain won't be big problem

Heavy rains halted play yesterday as the world's best golfers descended on Merion.

Tournament officials sounded confident there wouldn't be any problems this week. Merion is one of the best draining golf courses, largely because it's not built on sand.

"It is maybe the best draining golf course I have ever seen," said USGA director Mike Davis.

METRO

Shake down

Woods, Garcia shake on it

Tiger Woods and Sergio Garcia are at least being cordial.

The two golfers shook hands during a brief exchange at the driving range prior to yesterday's practice round. When asked for comment after the handshake, Woods said, "I'm not going there."

Woods and Garcia had been feuding in recent weeks after Garcia made racially-charged comments.

METRO

Take the train

Lots closed, ride SEPTA

U.S. Open officials are suggesting spectators ride public transit.

Inclement weather led to the closing of designated parking lots, including Rose Tree Park in Media. Fans were asked to use the PPL Park lot in Chester and wait for free shuttle buses.

SEPTA, via the Regional Rail and Norristown High Speed Line, are options. The Ardmore Avenue Station is within walking distance. METRO

Sisk has seen it all at America's golf tournament

Golf. This Temple alum is excited to be back in Philly, but tough decisions lie ahead.

Sisk attended Temple.
GETTY IMAGES

For Temple alum Geoffrey Sisk, being back in the field for his seventh U.S. Open is special enough. Qualifying when it's taking place at historic Merion, about 15 miles from where he played in college, makes it truly memorable

But the 48-year-old has no illusions that he'll be any kind of a factor this week, even if players are forced to play some of those famed holes in scuba gear. He's only made the cut two times in his previous U.S. Opens.

"Hopefully I play well," said Sisk, who shot a 4-under 68 in his June 3 qualifying round to punch his ticket. "I have nothing to lose in this whole situation and everything to gain.

"If I finish last, I finish last. If I finish middle of the pack, then fine. If I make some extra money, that's great, too."

Sisk tied for 30th at Pinehurst in 1999, 15 shots behind winner Payne Stewart. In 2003, he shot a 70 at Olympia Fields outside Chicago. For the most part, it's been a struggle for the man who played four years on the Nationwide Satellite Tour and just one stint (1999) on the PGA Tour.

"I've done it all at the U.S. Open," said Sisk, who will be paired with amateur Cheng-Tsung Pan of Taipei and Canadian Mackenzie Hughes the first two days. "I've shot in the 80s, mid-70s, not in the 60s yet. Three-putts, four-putts, I've had it all."

Sisk hasn't played at Merion since he was an amateur in the late 1980s.

"It's nice to be back in this area," said Sisk. "I played the golf course here back in '88 at the U.S. Amateur. Played one practice round and one tournament round. But I remember quite a bit of the golf course."

No matter what happens at Merion, Sisk will be facing some tough decisions. He's considering trying the Champions Tour when he turns 50, but that depends on the level of his play and the financial commitment he's willing to make.

Or he may just keep doing what he's been doing since his Temple days when he used to play Whitemarsh Valley and other local courses as much as possible.

"I know it's going to be difficult," said Sisk, when asked about Merion. "All I can say is that this is a great venue, and it's going to be exciting."

And hopefully by Thursday, and the rest of the weekend, it will also be dry.
